RETAIL SELLING, ADVERTISING, DISPLAY OF MIRRORS

Prepared for Nurre Dealers, "HOW TO MERCHANTISE MIRRORS" is filled with display, merchandising and advertising suggestions gleaned from the successful experiences of hundreds of Nurre dealers. Every suggestion or idea contained in its pages has been proved successful by some dealers.

By following its suggestions you can establish your store as the mirror headquarters in your trading area. If you do not already have your copy, write the nearest Nurre plant today.

Living Pictures

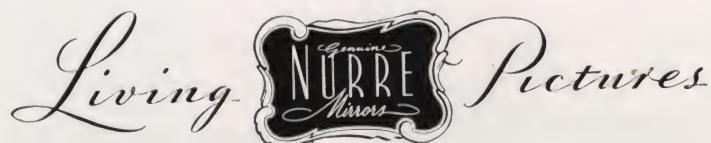

THE concept of the mirror was probably born on that day when Eve first saw her reflection in a quiet forest pool—and found it pleasant to her startled eyes. And ever since that day, through the centuries, the artisans have been striving to make even better mirrors, to satisfy the vanity of the human race.

Today's mirrors far excel the crude craftsmanship of antiquity, yet the best of modern mirrors are easily within reach of the most modest of modern purses.

And today the mirror is no longer a mere looking glass, but a "living picture," reflecting the life and color of the home, the soft glow of the lamps, the play of sunlight through a garden window—an ever-changing picture that shames the finest paintings of the great artists.

When that master architect designed the Taj Mahal, only to lose his eyesight as a reward for creating the "world's most beautiful building," he felt that a single view of so much loveliness was not enough. And so he built a "mirror pool" to reflect the exquisite beauty of his creation in all its changing moods from rosy dawn to pale moonlight. And, in so doing, he created a "living picture."

Mirrors can transform a commonplace room into one of unmistakable charm and add a feeling of spaciousness that belies its actual dimensions.

Eighteenth Century CHIPPENDALE

(Circa 1750) Chippendale furniture is identified by the chair splat pierced in interlaced ribband design, the cabriole leg, often carved with an acanthus leaf. His fondness for the Chinese is found in the use of the Chinese motifs such as the fret on chair backs and stretchers.

Here's a true Chippendale of exquisite charm; delicate frame, finished in antique bronze; delicate carving in the gold mirrors forming a border.

*No. 943—39 x 36" Mirror

MAKING Nurre MIRRORS IS A CRAFTSMAN'S JOB

IN these days we have come to think of practically everything that surrounds us in terms of mass production. Every little accessory of our daily lives conjures up visions of assembly lines, of huge machines spitting forth parts by the thousands. And that is a true picture as it pertains to most of the articles we use in our daily lives. Without this genius of mass production that is so peculiarly American we would be deprived of many of the products that make our standard of living the highest in the world.

Mirrors are the striking exception! The Nurre Companies, Inc., the largest exclusive manufacturers of mirrors, have applied the principles of mass production insofar as it was possible, but the making of Nurre mirrors is still largely the work of the two hands of the craftsman.

No machine has been invented that can successfully perform the delicate operation of glass cutting. The silvering process in spite of many improvements in methods still largely requires manual skill and judgment for its successful completion. The beautiful engravings and beveling seen on many Nurre Mirrors are all performed by a craftsman, under whose skilled hands the intricate and lovely patterns grow.

No, the Nurre factories do not belong to the realm of the production engineer. Here the craftsman reigns, imprisoning lasting loveliness in glass for your enjoyment.

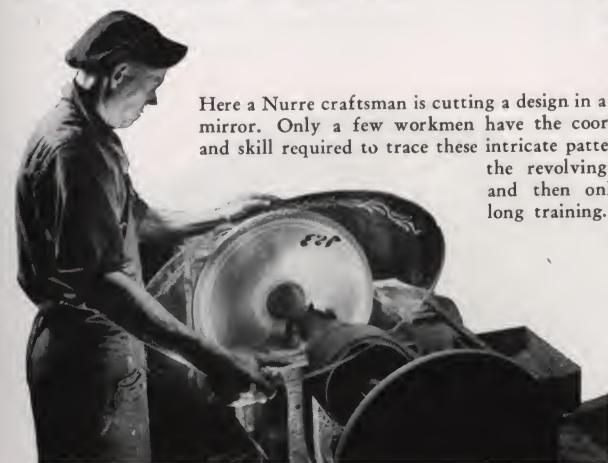

In the Nurre factories, experienced operators grind the bevel on your mirrors by forcing them against revolving grindstones. A high degree of precision is required for this operation.

Cleaned and sensitized, the mirror glass with the silver solution passes on a traveling belt under a battery of Infra Red lamps, where the silver is precipitated on the glass.

Here a Nurre craftsman is cutting a design in a circular mirror. Only a few workmen have the coordination and skill required to trace these intricate patterns over the revolving cutter, and then only after long training.

Quality in a mirror repays its owner handsomely from the very moment the mirror is put into use. When of inferior grade it literally reflects its poor quality to every visitor in your home.

Plate Glass

The Nurre mirrors shown in this booklet are all made of genuine Plate Glass, with surfaces of the glass ground and polished to smooth parallel planes. The reflections are without distortion, clear and true in proportion. Inferior mirrors may be made of so-called "shock glass" or ordinary window glass. This glass is not ground; its surfaces are not truly parallel and have a characteristic waviness. Its reflected images may be grotesquely distorted. You can tell the difference between a "shock" glass and a Genuine Nurre Plate Glass Mirror by looking into the mirror at an acute angle and check-

Every mirror glass is carefully and minutely inspected—the slightest flaw or scratch is discovered and carefully removed on the polishing wheel before being silvered.

After silvering, a protective metallic coating, suspended in lacquer, is sprayed on the silver side. This forms a "shingle coating" that gives long years of protection against the deteriorating effects of corrosive atmospheric gases.

ing the reflected images for clarity or distortion.

The unprotected silver on any mirror is easily damaged by humidity and corrosive gases in the air which may cause discoloration, peeling, flaking or ugly cloudiness. On genuine Nurre Plate Glass Mirrors the silver film is expertly applied by skilled workmen and from a solution of proved excellence. Only the choicest of graded materials and chemicals are employed in the silvering operation which precipitates the pure metallic silver from the silver nitrate solution. Following the application of the silver and its thorough drying in special lehrs, there is finally applied the new and greatly improved protective coating for the silver film—a protection which assures long and perfect life to your mirror.

PLATE GLASS MIRRORS

(Polished Plate Glass Silvered)

THERE IS NO SUBSTITUTE FOR PLATE GLASS

Two absolutely parallel ground and polished surfaces the result of costly manufacture.
No chance for distortion — no customer dissatisfaction — no come-backs — First Class Merchandise.

CRYSTAL GLASS MIRRORS

(Sheet Glass Silvered)

No ground and polished surfaces. Due to the process of manufacture a waviness results and must be expected in the best crystal glass mirrors.

HEAVY SHEET GLASS MIRRORS (SHOCK)

(Ordinary Window Glass Silvered)

Due to the process of manufacture all of the defects inherent in window glass, including dis-ortion, inevitably result.
